Stock Markets Open Mixed Tuesday as Big Banks, Delta Earnings Weigh

CONTRIBUTOR Dan Caplinger — The Motley Fool

PUBLISHED JUL 14, 2020 12:02PM EDT

Earnings season has officially begun, and investors can expect the stock market to see increased volatility as companies start to tell the tale of how the second quarter of 2020 went for them. Monday's big late-day sell-off left many market participants feeling a bit gun-shy about the future for stocks, but strength in areas like the energy sector helped to provide a lift in some indexes. Just before 11 a.m. EDT, the Dow Jones Industrial Average (DJIINDICES:ADU) was up 173

U.S. Stocks Rise as Banks Kick Off Earnings Season

Investors digest results from JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup and Wells Fargo for insights into the health of the economy

U.S. stocks turned higher Tuesday as investors parsed earnings results from the biggest banks for insights on the health of the American economy and its lenders.

The S&P 500 rose about 0.4% after wavering earlier in the session. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose roughly 290 points, or 1.1%. The Nasdaq Composite fell roughly 0.2%.

A rally in the equity market on Monday fizzled after California rolled back some of its revenue plans, stoking fears about additional lockdowns.

Earnings season kicked off in earnest this week with the latest quarterly results from big banks. JPMorgan and Citigroup's earnings beat analysts' estimates, but the firms' results highlighted the extraordinary economic uncertainty ahead and a worrisome outlook on the health of their corporate and consumer clients. Both set aside billions of dollars for rising loan losses as they girded for defaults.

Shares of JPMorgan rose 0.7%, lifting the Dow, while Citigroup's slipped about 1.7%.

Wells Fargo's shares declined 4.2% after it reported a $2.4 billion loss and said it intends to cut its dividend next quarter.

"This shows that there's a three-speed recovery in the economy," said Sebastian Galy, a Second verse same as the first: With little hope for a near-term vaccine, the key stock drivers for the back half of 2020 will largely echo those in place now, Piper Sandler says. That is good news for packaged food stocks and casual- and athletic-apparel stocks.

Analyst Michael Lavery writes that his base-case scenario for the rest of the year is basically a continuation of the current environment. He isn't anticipating a widely available vaccine for at least another year, which means prolonged safety measures at businesses and consumer reluctance to spend on travel and entertainment—as well as high unemployment somewhat mitigated by another round of government stimulus.

Therefore, he expects the "momentum behind current winners to continue." He is positive on meal-oriented, at-home food stocks such as General Mills (ticker: GIS), Campbell Soup (CPB) and B&G Foods (BGS); restaurants and food distributors that are nimble enough to take on the new normal, such as Chipotle Mexican Grill (CMG) and Sysco (SYY); apparel firms levered to comfortable clothing, including Crocs (CROX), Lululemon Athletica (LULU), and Nike (NKE); and home and backyard retailers such as Lowe's (LOW), Big Lots (BIG), and Yeti Holdings (YETI).

That revenue would rise in a pandemic is surprising, but analysts don't usually focus on how much cash is coming in the door at banks. Banking is a spread business, with lenders making the difference between their lending rates and borrowing costs. Analysts often don't publish sales estimates.

Shares of Tesla Inc. TSLA, +1.34% are up more than 4% in premarket trading Tuesday after Piper Sandler analyst Alexander Potter raised his price target on the stock to $2322 from $939, writing of "faster-than-expected share gains" and big opportunities in software. Though Tesla shares have rocketed nearly 260% on the year and the stock's valuation is 88 times higher than it was after its 2010 initial public offering, Potter said that "resoundingly" his conclusion is to stick with the stock. "While deliveries are a key driver of our increased near-term estimates, software is the biggest driver of our increased DCF-based price target," he wrote in a late Monday note to clients. "Tesla has noted the possibility for 30%+ gross margins if/when more customers opt-in for purchasing the company's full self-driving (FSD) software." COLUMN-London Metal Exchange shines a (little) light on shadow stocks: Andy Home

The London Metal Exchange's (LME) new report on "shadow" stocks was greeted with a collective yawn by the industrial metals market. The exchange's attempt to throw more light on inventories "did not hold any surprises and there was not a 'sea' of hidden metal", was a typical reaction from LME brokerage Kingdom Futures. As of the end of May, there...
